Justice Scudder's decision that it is not slander to call a horse dealer "a skin" establishes another bulwark for free speech. As the justice remarked in dismissing the suit, "Things like that are nearly always said in the course of a horse deal." They are, in fact, an essential part of the transaction, says the New York World. There probably never was a horse deal one party to which did not think he had been cheated, and to prevent by law the free expression of his grievance in the trade's time honored terms of invective would amount to an interference with an ancient American industry. The decision in effect authorizes the continuance of horse-dealing under its traditional methods, whereas an adverse ruling would have tended to hamper it not destroy it. In thus dignifying the language of horse trading the learned judge does not, it is true, raise it to the level of the language of politics. It may still be hazardous to call a dealer a crook or liar. Apart from its new legal status, "skin" is defined in the dictionaries as "a cheat, or fraud, or sharper." On a horse dealer's lips, like "scamp" and "loafer" on the lips of a mayor, it has lost its original force from frequent and promiscuous use and become a technical trade term.

A contract agent for an electric concern has invented what he calls a "cent-hour" meter designed to give a positive answer to the question, "How much does it cost to operate?" The meter is mounted on a pedestal with a shelf attached on which the device is placed. When any current consuming appliance is connected with the meter a hand on the dial points instantly to the number of cents per hour it costs to operate it. It is especially useful in demonstrating to a prospective consumer the cost of current for a device that consumes energy at more than one rate. Experience has shown that this method of answering a most important question has more weight with the customer than a verbal reply. The reading of the dial of each meter is made to correspond with the central station's rate for current.

Another man has invented a word language—Port. Frederick J. Braendle, official translator of the United States pension office. It is described as "a universalized English, with a new alphabet." There would be more chance for a world language if there were not so many of them. But the trouble is that people who believe in the practicability of the idea and take up the study of the latest system, find that just when they have become proficient in it, some one else has produced a later world language which attracts all the new devotees to the idea. The babel of tongues seems likely to continue, therefore, despite inventions of artificial language systems intended for all the world.

The man who wants to test his will power can now do so by wrenching himself free from the thermometer habit.

Cancer may be curable, as the doctor says, but the knife isn't half as inviting as turtle serum.

"The Great Ship 'SEEANDBEE,'" now running daily between Cleveland and Buffalo has created a sensation with the traveling public, and is attracting to that popular lake route, a vast number of travelers who break their railroad journey at either city to take the delightful lake trip and at the same time, inspect her mighty engines, her magnificent interior decorations, her complete wireless telegraph system, wonderful electric illumination scheme and other interesting features.

The "SEEANDBEE" is the largest and most costly passenger steamer on inland waters of the world. Length 500 feet, breadth 98 feet, 6 inches, 510 Staterooms and Parlors, accommodating 1,500 passengers, equaling in sleeping capacity the largest hotels in the country. She can carry 6,000 people, the population of a good sized town. Her Main Saloon, Lounge, Atrium, Main Dining Room and Buffet are all in the highest type of decorative art.

All railroad tickets reading between Cleveland and Buffalo are good for transportation on C. & B. Line Steamers, and those traveling either east or west, should not miss the opportunity of taking the restful lake ride afforded by the splendid service of this line.
